Tennessee Milling Enterprise From time immemorial the milling bu iness in Tennnessee has gone by jerks good water-mills, which ground by the urn." there has been no constant systenatic milling in this State. The larger mills have generally run for a few months when the bulk of the grain was on the market, permitting all but their immediate wants to pass on to other markets, thus finding, at the end of a brief period, their ome supply exhausted, and their mills idle for the rest of the season. The coursequence is that our merchants have been forced to send abroad for flour, compelling the consumers to pay transportation both ways, and giving foreign millers all the net profits of manufacturing.

It is plain that this process was wrong. Tennessee wheat makes better flour than that of any other State, and Tennessee farmers, millers and consumers should have the full benefit of it. This has not been the case, for the reasons above stated. But it seems that we are on the eve of an important revolution in the milling business, at least in this respect. The Jackson Mills, under the intelligent and energetic management of John J. McCann. went into operation after the present season was far advanced, and the prevailing cusom had shorn the market of a great proportion of the home crop. By his capital and foresight, however, he laid in heavy Gen, Carlin, then Commissioner for this supplies, and has since, by liberal prices, drawn daily receipts from the producers State. To do so, he will be forced to draw partial supplies from Northern markets until the growing home crop is placed on the market. If other millers in Tennessee would co-operate with him, a complete revolution could be wrought during the present year, and our the startling fact that the interest of the State become a flour market worthy of our capabilities, and a successful competitor with those of any other section of the Union both for home consumption and export.

To the Editors of the Union and American I have read the article of "Observer, in your issue of the 28th. I hope the writer will excuse me, but really if he had not signed his name "Observer," I should have suspected, from the tenor of his article, that he was more than an observer, perhaps a participator in the contest, which is now going on about the proper location of the Fair Grounds. The celebrated Joe Richie, of Hamilton County, Tennessee, who escaped from the jail in Chattanooga about two months since, has turned up in Pickens County, Georgia where, being caught at his old tricks of horse-stealing, he killed his captors and scaped. The Dalton Times, of Friday, gives the following particulars:

"Richie had stolen and awapped a mule, and being pursued by a party who fell in, on their way, with the Sheriff, was overtaken at a house four miles from The Sheriff entered the house and found bim seated at the table shaving himself. Pincing his hand upon Richie's shoulder he told him he was his prisoner, and ordered him to get up and follow him. Richie re-plied, "You'll let me finish shaving first won't you?" to which the Sheriff assented. The desperado then stooped down and ommenced strapping his razor on his boot, and rose up with a pistol in his hand which he jerked from the leg of his boo and immediately placed the muzzle against the breast of the Sheriff and fire killing him instantly. The deputy th ushed in and was fired at twice in rap ecession, both balls taking effect in arm and shoulder, disabling him. Th desperado then rushed from the house and iomestic cotton goods presents no new or mportant features as compared with a veek ago. A fair trade has been in proweek ago. A fair trade has been in progress in most kinds of the leading fabrics, but there has been no special movement in any department. The active demand for many fabrics noted hat week has been checked in part by the comparative quietude of the cotton market, with its accompanying depression of prices of the raw material. But there has been no reaction in prices of cotton goods, which generally remain about the same, though some as tageous to the buyer. That sellers are more disposed to sell at the market price than they were a week ago is evidenced by the fact that many fabrics which were then withheld from market in anticipation of better prices are non-freely offered at prices current a week ago. But if a change has come over the sellers, so there has over the spirit of buyers, who, now that they can obtain goods at prices which they bif a week ago, are not disposed to take
